LETTER TO THE BOARD

[Fertilemind Capital Letterhead]

October 29, 2008

Dear Board of Directors:

Fertilemind Capital has been a shareholder of Tucows for five years. As Fertilemind Capital's General Partner, I have stood by with increasing frustration as Tucows has failed to enhance shareholder value, despite the considerable potential its assets hold.

Management has laid the basis for good performance, in part, by assembling 9,000 accounts of small to medium web hosting firms. The company is now in a position to provide innovative domain and email services to them.

Unfortunately, though, a series of operational miscues and strategic distractions have delayed any chance that these strengths would lead to increased customer satisfaction and shareholder value.

I would like to recommend six specific actions that will, if executed, augment the experience of Tucows customers while enhancing value for shareholders.

One: Sell the Entire Domain Portfolio Within Two Years

The company currently has a domain portfolio of 150,000 names, including 1,000 that management has termed "gems," and 22,000 which it has billed as "brandable." The 39,000 involved in the personal name business, which add to the experience of Tucows customer, are important. The rest of the domain portfolio, which includes those names monetized by parking, should be unhitched in relatively short order.

Value to shareholders is contained in the acquisition and sale of the portfolio, not in its more cumbersome operation. Management has spoken of various strategies to monetize the portfolio, including parking, leasing, and sale to end-users. But they have never claimed that this business helps its customers. It is important for a company that has had several operational miscues to focus only on businesses that prove a benefit to its customer base.

Moreover, creating a portfolio of media assets without adding value through operations would only be beneficial during inflationary times. With inflation, the price of most assets rise while the company's cost of capital remains the same. Given that the market for premium domain names is falling, though (along with other financial assets like real estate and public equities) it is clear that such an environment does not currently exist.

There are live auctions that have shown strong liquidity. The auctions generally attract speculators and niche Internet media companies.

Edgar Filing: TUCOWS INC /PA/ - Form SC 13D

Though the macro environment for domain names has slipped, management still stands able to reallocate capital to its benefit. Its own equity has deflated more than the 30-40% that the domain name market appears to have declined. We have done some very rough calculations based on past sales prices and think the portfolio is worth anywhere from $10-$20 million.

It would be wise to auction off the entirety of the portfolio within two years.

Two: Sell Tucows' Stake in Afilias

Tucows owns 7% of Afilias, receiving $600,000 in dividends during 2007. Assuming that Afilias is paying dividends out at 50% of their free cash flow (a typical payout rate), their cash flow can be fixed at about $17 million. If the company were valued at a 10 multiple of free cash flow, Afilias's enterprise value would then be approximately $150-$180 million. Even factoring in no excess cash or other asset, Tucows' stake can be valued at roughly $12 million. For Tucows' customers and shareholders, this cash could be put to better long-terms use elsewhere.

Three: Dutch Tender

As the cash arrives from the Afilias stake and the sales from the domain portfolio, management should aggressively buy back stock. With these sales complete, management could readily initiate a large Dutch tender of at least $20 million.

Four: Dividend

After the Dutch Tender, the company's equity base will be smaller. It is easy to see a scenario where a dividend of $3 million (roughly 50% of last year's normalized free cash flow) could offer close to a double digit yield to the remaining investors.

Five: Exploit Trend Toward Presence

There has been quite a move towards developing tools allowing Internet users to display and view other people's online presence. Wikipedia defines presence as "a status indicator that conveys ability and willingness of a potential communication partner."

Potential customers of personal name domains are more likely to be interested in innovative ways to display their presence. Tucows, with its personal name domain portfolio and strong AJAX-based web email interface, is uniquely positioned to offer end-users an ability to both display their presence and monitor the presence of others.

While there are clearly other players out there in this space, such as Friendfeed and Twitter, the combination of email, a personal domain name and integration of APIs from the competitors will create a unique product that would serve to set apart the 9,000 hosting companies that Tucows has served so well over the past decade.

Edgar Filing: TUCOWS INC /PA/ - Form SC 13D

Six: Put a Large Outside Shareholder on the Board

With Fertilemind Capital's 13-D filing, Tucows currently has 3 13-D holders holding a combined 23.8 million shares. Current board members have holdings of only 903 thousand shares (4.8 million shares, if counting unexercised options). It would be in the shareholders' interest to add one of the 13-D filers to the board. I would serve, if asked, accepting no cash or options. It is important that investors in Fertilemind Capital Fund I, as well as investors in Tucows, understand that my prime and sole concern is to increase shareholder value.

In summary, it is important to note that Tucows has great assets, a unique customer offering, and patient shareholders. With appropriate actions, this recent period of frustration can serve as a springboard toward greater customer satisfaction and enhanced shareholder value.

I look forward to working with management, the employees and fellow shareholders in making the most of Tucows' many opportunities.

Sincerely,

/s/ Aram Fuchs
