What Legato Means to EMC and Our Customers

An Open Letter from Joe Tucci

The union of Legato and EMC will make it easier for customers to manage and protect all of their information throughout the information lifecycle from inception, to archive to disposal. Customers are eager for this efficient capability, because they tell us it is the best way to get the maximum value from their information at the lowest total cost of ownership.

This acquisition represents a significant win for both companies customers, employees, partners and stockholders, accelerating the evolution of EMC into the company that offers the best choice of integrated information storage solutions for the widest range of customer needs. That is one very attractive combination.

Legato broadens the EMC open storage software portfolio and accelerates our open software strategy in precisely the right areas for customers: Information Access and Recovery, including rapidly growing areas such as messaging and content management.

This move takes EMC further down a path forged in 2001, when we announced the separation of EMC Open Software Operations from the storage platforms side of our business. This has given EMC software developers the freedom to create the industry s best software for multi-vendor storage environments.

The acquisition of Legato underscores EMC s commitment to heterogeneous storage management and deepens EMC s unparalleled storage expertise and superior customer service and support.

Edgar Filing: LEGATO SYSTEMS INC - Form 425

EMC, the world's top brand in information storage becomes more valuable, while Legato grows stronger as a result, joining a company backed by $5.7 billion in cash and investments at the end of 2002.

Last year, EMC spent approximately 75 percent of its $781 million R&D budget on software development alone. In addition, Legato will be our 10th software-related acquisition since January 2000.

People ask me if this means EMC is becoming a software company. The correct answer is to describe EMC as a technology-led, information storage solutions company, where software plays an ever growing role.

Software represented approximately 23 percent of EMC revenues in 2002. We expect that percentage to grow. Today, more than half of our employees are dedicated to software, services and building integrated solutions that leverage our full automated networked storage portfolio. Legato's direct sales force and extensive relationships with channel partners will expand EMC's market reach and complement our go-to-market strategy nicely.

With our shared focus and complementary lines of business, Legato and EMC will be even better positioned to serve the emerging needs of our customers and transform the storage industry well into the future.
