At a conference call on November 12, 2009, discussing the earnings of The Walt Disney Company for the year and quarter ended October 3, 2009, Robert A. Iger, President and Chief Executive Officer, and Thomas O. Staggs, Senior Executive Vice President and Chief Financial Officer, made the following remarks relating to the pending acquisition of Marvel Entertainment, Inc., and responded to a question from an analyst relating to the transaction as set forth.

Prepared remarks of Mr. Iger:

We are also working towards closing the Marvel deal. Since we announced the acquisition at the end of August, it's become even clearer to us just how well known and appealing Marvel characters are around the world. We are looking forward to increasing the visibility and value of Marvel's characters and stories across our businesses, platforms and global markets.

By adding Marvel to our slate of Disney and Pixar films, we will in the coming year be making movies under three of the best known labels in family entertainment. These brands resonate with consumers globally and give us a competitive advantage in a world of pretty much limitless choice.

Prepared remarks of Mr. Staggs

Our first priority is to invest in existing businesses or new growth opportunities that generate attractive returns. We are also willing to pursue acquisitions to the extent we are convinced that they can enable us to sustain or build competitive advantage and deliver strong returns. The pending acquisition of Marvel illustrates well the type of opportunity that we believe can utilize our existing strengths to drive future growth from high quality branded content.

Additionally, we expect to continue returning capital to our shareholders through dividends and share repurchase. We purchased only a modest number of our shares during Q4 given constraints imposed by the pending Marvel acquisition. However, we continue to believe our shares remain attractive at current levels and expect to continue our repurchase activity.

Question from Michael Nathanson of Sanford Bernstein and the response of Mr. Staggs and Mr. Iger:

Tom, in the past few calls you've talked about weakness in the licensing business, and I just wonder how that market is looking right now and is perhaps your content cycle helping that market? And then, what's been the reaction of your licensing partners to the Marvel deal, and how have those conversations gone?

Mr. Staggs

[As to] the license business I would say this. I mentioned in the prepared remarks that we didn't really see the full effect of the downturn until we got to the beginning of calendar 2009, and so that's still going on in the backdrop. So on a relative basis we still see some year-over-year softness there. Also, even though I think we've seen some encouraging news on the advertising side that Bob cited, et cetera, this holiday period, of course, much of it was determined by the extent to which people were ready to place orders over the last few months, and so that's going to impact us to a certain extent. Now, the question is what will come in terms of reorders, the pace of that, et cetera, and so that remains to be seen. [As to] the content cycle, I would say we saw a little bit of softness due to tough comparisons to Hannah Montana and High School Musical. Now as we look forward, I like the trend in the content cycle and I like the refresh that's going on there, Toy Story being probably first and foremost, but also some of these other properties that we have high hopes for. And it will be interesting to see whether we continue to go Fairies which we'd like to do, we have Princess and the Frog which is another Princess to add to that line up, which as I think you know is an important set of franchises for us. [We have] Cars coming a little bit later on another year down the road. And Cars of course has been one of our most important franchises and the prospect of a sequel to that film really bodes well. So we like the way the content cycle is going from here. Marvel clearly is an augmentation of that overall, and I don't know that we have any specific reaction from licensees at this point. But I think that, as Bob said earlier, as we've gotten closer to it we think the prospects for Marvel are at least as good as we thought at the time that we entered the transaction.

Mr. Iger

You're right. We haven't gotten much direct reaction other than to hear from certain licensees just how much interest there is out there both in the US and in international markets about Marvel properties, and there's real excitement about the films that they have coming up or that are being made by others, including Iron Man II and another sequel to Spiderman, and some of the other properties they have on the marketplace. We think it's going to be a great opportunity for us down the road and we're excited about it.
