On May 26, 2003, Metro One Telecommunications, Inc. announced that it had launched Infone a service that provides enhanced directory and personal assistant services directly to consumers.

This new Infone service to consumers is subject to all the risks and uncertainties described in our reports filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission. In order to build awareness among consumers and encourage them to sign up for these services, we have embarked upon a national advertising and marketing campaign that has required commitments of nearly $30 million and may require that further advance commitments be made before we are able to fully gauge the extent of consumer acceptance. These expenditures will necessarily precede the receipt of revenues from customers for the Infone services. If our customer base and related number of calls for this service do not grow to generate sufficient levels of revenue on a timely basis, or our financial and pricing assumptions are not accurate, these advertising and marketing expenses may materially exceed our Infone-related revenues, resulting in losses and pressure on our liquidity and capital resources. In such event, we may need additional financing, but there can be no assurance that such financing would be available or that the terms offered would be acceptable to us. While the Infone service is in its initial stages and until we gain more experience with consumer acceptance, it will be difficult to predict our future results of operations.
