FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

SILICOM ANNOUNCES REDIRECTOR INTELLIGENT NETWORKING CARDS

Brings Cost/Performance-Optimized Intelligent Filtering, Multi-Port Connectivity and Automated Bypass Capabilities to WAN Optimization and Other Appliances

KFAR SAVA, Israel July 28, 2008 Silicom Ltd. (NASDAQ and TASE: SILC) today announced its latest innovation: the Redirector line of intelligent networking adaptors. Designed in collaboration with a leading WAN optimization appliance provider, the first prototype in the line has been designed for the 10 Gbps environment, and additional versions are now in the planning stage.

The Redirector integrates intelligent filtering, multi-port connectivity and automated bypass capabilities on a single small-footprint network card, a solution that optimizes the balance between intelligent functionality, connectivity performance and cost. In typical WAN optimization applications, the use of the Redirector eliminates the need for the CPU to process up to 50% of all data packets, thereby removing a significant bottleneck to peak system performance. This is especially important in a market that is moving to 10Gbps interfaces, resulting in a much higher load of high-speed traffic on the CPU. In addition, the Redirector is designed to operate via industry-standard Intel/Broadcom drivers, minimizing the changes required in existing systems to facilitate this performance improvement.

We are very excited to bring a new concept to the market: an all-in-one card performance enhancer that strikes the right balance between cost and functionality, said Shaikie Orbach, Silicom's President and CEO. From a performance standpoint, we are pleased to add intelligent filtering to our industry-leading connectivity and bypass solutions, a combination that will bring a competitive edge to WAN optimization and other appliances. From a cost perspective, we have succeeded in creating an affordable solution that can be deployed with a minimum of additional effort. As such, we believe the Redirector is a unique product that meets the needs of a large and growing market, and that it has the potential to expand and diversify our revenue base.
